16 April 2025 2 min read

South Africa and the world face economic fallout. COVID-19 has imposed extremely difficult trading conditions on South African companies like never before. These unprecedented events will impact on the way we manage our businesses for months and years to come. Successful trading enterprises will be the unfortunate victims of these strained economic circumstances, which might result in many companies having no alternative but to file for business rescue or liquidation. Directors of companies will have their work cut out for them and tough decisions will have to be made.

Please join us for an update as our panel of experts unpack the impact that the new economic dispensation will have on South African directors of companies and how they are expected to navigate their way around ongoing obstacles and challenges.
